Week of Nov. 6th.

The warm weather of the past four weeks has had the effect we anticipated on manufactu-rers and importers. With fac-tories going night and day to keep up with anticipated orders, the long smell of mild weather the long spell of mild weather knocked their calculations skyhigh, and now they are clamoring for buyers for their merchandise at best prices obtainabie. The results of these special purchases will be clearly appa-rent at The Meyer's Store this week, for this entire news conspecial prices. The sales announced are the greatest Mey-er's have held for many months, and the end is not yet, for thou-sands of dollars' worth of merchaudise, bought under prices on account of these special conditions, is yet to be received, and will be placed on sale da by day and hour by hour as quickly as they can be assorted and ar-ranged for selling. The diversifled kinds of merchandise to be sold is but another evidence of what The Meyer's Store is continually doing to bring everybody within its reach everything they need at the most economi gal prices. It you have delayed any of your fall shopping, this, week's sale should attract you direct to The Meyer's Store.

The audience room is cruciferm in share with two side galeries and an ergan left in the rear, lighted by several windows of stained glass. The old pipe organ, presented to the congregation by King Adolphus of Swedon was made at Lutzen in that country expressly for this church. After its ar-rival in America it was transported from Phradelphia to Madison county, then Spotsylvania county, on occarts. who were these poons and wheather came they? Some two centuries ago the people in a little state in Southern Ger-many were much oppressed religiously. Their ruler, known as "The Elector" being a man of weak character changed his religion as one but on and off his clothes. First a Romanist, then a Lutheran, and finally once more a Catholic. John Esten Cooke says of them:

"These German Palatines were excellent people and remarkable for their true plety. Like the Heguenots, they infused an admirable element into Virginia Society—a brave and sturdy element which lingers still in their descendants, among whom is a hardy soldier and ex-Governor of Virginia—General Kemper."

and following along the banks until it was navigable, we came to the great Hangwa district of the Aruwini, writes Albert R. Lloyd in Almsiee's for November Here were aights and more excitement. Having procured canoes. I ment my porters back, retaining only my three faithful boys. Our bostmen were the notorious cannibals of the Aruwini; very different from the Pygmies, these were fine staiwart men, many of them considerably over six feet, carrying themesalves with the most aristocratic bearing imaginable. As cance men, they could hardly be excelled; each beat contained from ten to fifteen men, who, with their long, tapering paddles, made the heavy dug-out literally dance through the water, it was a most delightful sensation, after the toilsome pain of walking through the thicket, to be comfortably reciting while whizzed along at about eight miles an hour, for the current being strong in our favor, we often made quite that speed. One sat all day and gazed along the banks of this marvelous river. Sometimes elephants sporting themselves in the shallow water near the bank would, for a moment to two, he visible; forest antelione, too, were often seen having their evening drink, while all the while mogkeys chattered in the trees and screamed at us as we passed. The village of the Bangchattered in the trees and screamed at us as we passed. The viliage of the Bang-wa were most curious, the houses con-sisting of tall, coneshaped structures attaining a height of from tifteen to twenty

Their language was strange to me, or I might have heard some extraordinary remarks; as it was, their hungry looks were quite enough to make me feel a little uncomfortable at times. I was recognified the control of the co ittle uncomfortable at times. I was generally able to find an interpreter who would innuire of the neople for me for a suitable place to pitch my tent, and this was always most courteously given by the chief himself, generally in the middle of the village. Sometimes they would bring me quantitles of food, sweet potatoes, lamanas, lams, etc., and in exchange. I gave them little trinkets such as heads, whistles, knives, etc. Fifteen days' not-file on the river brought us to Basoko, the chief station of the Belgians on the Cango. From hence the steamers run to the coast, and after waiting a few days, we arrived, and I "At last we reached the river Ituri, and following along the banks until it waiting a few days, we arrived, and I
